

This government has proven itself utterly untrustworthy with regard to all questions of data and privacy. On every occasion where there has been an ethical or moral question in this domain; the government has failed the test and taken the lowest road. There is no point talking about 'privacy by design' when the government's stated, and acted, intent is to use all data against it's opponents, the vulnerable, to profit it's supporters and to it's political advantage. In short; this mob cannot be trusted, at any level, and any data or privacy proposal made by it should be opposed and resisted. I'd comment on the paper itself but it is such a word-salad of half-baked ideas and corporate cliches, it's just impossible to address all its flaws. Utterly hopeless.
